

Mariah, a beautiful, mixed-race (mulatto) and educated young woman is cherished and adored by her white father, an American ex-patriot and business man living in England. Sheltered and pampered in a quiet lifestyle of privilege, she had no idea that slavery existed. She certainly had no idea that her mother remained the property of her grandfather, and that her parents had barely escaped America with their lives after her brother's birth, but events subsequent to her father's unexpected death opened her eyes to a dark past. Her world is turned upside-down when she unwittingly taken to America and forced into slavery. Horrified and mentally bruised by the cruelty of her circumstance, she becomes embittered and loses hope for a better future until she meets a very wealthy Master Adam Grantham who becomes fascinated by her poise and sophistication. When she cunningly tries to use his affections to her advantage, she finds that in addition to holding the keys to her freedom, he holds the key that unlocks the door to exhilarating, heavenly pleasures and insatiable desire, the likes of which she never known was humanly possible.
